Christopher Field

Chris grew up in Berkeley California and Newton Mass. He started teaching himself Japanese in high school and loved it so much he decided to major in Japanese studies at Harvard. Spent one year studying in Tokyo at the Stanford Center in Kioi-cho, Chiyoda, Tokyo. After college he studied basic electronics. After a few years working in industry, Chris decided to become a full time interpreter, specializing in technology, which he has done for 30+ years. He serves for very diverse clients from all industries and government. Many patent litigations, but also artists, lectures, business negotiations, joint development projects. Chris also worked in television for NHK (science documentaries) and Fuji (on air). He has two daughters, 14 and 18, and loves woodworking and singing.